

Chelsea and her daughter Sophia

Care That Goes Above and Beyond

Dear Friend,

Caring for others is one of Chelsea's greatest passions. It's why she began her career in respiratory therapy, and it's why she chose to work at AdventHealth Tampa — a hospital and a medical community dedicated to delivering compassionate, whole-person care.

Last October, 39-year-old Chelsea noticed a rapidly growing mass in her chest. Within days, testing revealed that she had metastatic breast cancer. Chelsea decided immediately that she would do whatever was necessary to have more time with her daughter Sophia — and she knew that the best available care was at AdventHealth Tampa's Kay Meyer Breast Care Center.

Chelsea said the Kay Meyer team helped her make the unexpected transition from caregiver to patient "with dignity and tender, open hearts." Throughout her journey, Chelsea's expert care team has felt "like a sisterhood" — going out of their way to check in, offer hugs, and provide resources for her family, no matter the hour.

Today, Chelsea is finished with her first series of chemotherapy and radiation treatments. Her fight continues, and so does her life. Chelsea relishes each moment with Sophia. The two can often be found doing art projects at the dinner table.

Support Patients Facing Cancer

At AdventHealth Tampa Foundation, our work is greater than supporting cancer care: we're on a mission to give our patients more. More personalized care options. More healthy years. More time with loved ones. That means providing world-class care, clinical trials and modern treatments, with a heartfelt, personal approach.

This Breast Cancer Awareness Month, we invite you to become a champion for Kay Meyer Breast Center patients like Chelsea — vibrant people who deserve the most. Friend, can we count on your support?

With gratitude,

Kourtney Sanchez
